

Guiding questions

How can residents of the Columbia Basin build a connection with the watershed? How can a member of the public have a voice in decision making processes that affect the basin? What can I do with my new knowledge of the Columbia River Basin?

Learning goals

Students will review and reflect on what they have learned about the Columbia River Basin, its history, and some of the current issues that will affect its future.

Students will consider ways they can grow their personal connection with the watershed.

Students will consider opportunities and challenges for members of the public to be involved in key decision making processes that will affect the basin's future.

Students will practice taking action by writing and sending an email to the government officials involved in either the Columbia River Treaty negotiation or the Columbia River Salmon Reintroduction Initiative.

Materials

- Contact List (see page 2)
- Letter Template (see page 3)

Preparation

- Print out Contact List (appendix 2)
- Distribute devices for each student to write an email (students (students will need access to appropriate email accounts), or provide materials for them to write a letter

Instructions

Total time: 90 minutes

- 1. Ask students to review what they have learned so far about the Columbia Basin throughout the curriculum (depending on how many Teach The Columbia lessons you've done with them or what they've learned elsewhere). Get students to pair up, explain a few points they remember to their partner, and choose a module or lesson that they found most interesting or that they'd like to learn more about. If you have extra time, search Google News or other places to see if there are any recent news items about these topics. 10 minutes
- 2. Specifically considering current issues that students have learned about (e.g. Columbia River Treaty, reintroducing salmon to the Upper Columbia) ask the class to brainstorm two lists: 10 minutes
  - 1. Reasons it can be challenging for members of the public to get involved
  - 2. Ways they think it could be possible to get involved. Supplement their list with the list of opportunities provided in the appendix.
- 3. Watch the video with Kathy Eichenberger, focusing on why citizen engagement is important, plus discussion. 30 minutes
- 4. Explain that the class is going to practice taking a concrete action to get involved by writing a letter or sending a short email to either the government officials involved in the Columbia River Treaty negotiation or the Columbia River Salmon Reintroduction Initiative. Share the templates provided in appendix 3. Prompt students to write 2-4 paragraphs about something they learned, something they have a question about, or an opinion they've developed about the issues at hand. 20 minutes
- 5. Get students to swap their draft with another student to proofread and share editing suggestions for a final draft. Get students to incorporate the peer feedback and then send their emails to the email addresses or mailing addresses provided: columbiarivertreaty@gov.bc.ca, info@gov.bc.ca, info@g

6. Encourage students to do more through the citizen engagement suggestions included as extensions. 5 minutes

Extensions

Opportunities for citizen engagement with Columbia Basin issues:

- Learn more through independent research. Resources include:
  - Explore the B.C. Government Columbia River Treaty website and follow on social media
  - Sign up for the B.C. Government's Columbia River Treaty e-newsletter
  - Explore the Columbia River Salmon Reintroduction Initiative website and follow on social media
- Participate in an education program such as Wildsight's Columbia River Field School.
- Pursue a post-secondary course of study in a related field.
- Attend public information and consultation events hosted by government agencies or other kinds of conferences/events.
- Reach out to the government officials who represent you or who are playing a role in shaping your future. Share your thoughts or ask for a casual conversation (sometimes called an "informational interview").
- Take a journey through the Columbia River watershed to learn and explore. For two big examples, watch interview videos with Graeme Lee Rowlands and Claire Dibble, who each followed the entire length of the river between its headwaters and the ocean.

1. Definitions of terms

Citizen Engagement: "Citizen engagement is a form of interaction between citizens and their governments. It can happen at any stage of the development or implementation of government policy and the delivery of public services, or be triggered by events in local areas. It can lead to a range of outcomes, including more effective services and more responsive and accountable states." - Participatory Methods

Watershed Management: Watershed management is the term used to describe how communities and governments manage activities within a river basin to ensure that its resources are used in a sustainable manner that is beneficial for all plants, animals, and humans within its boundaries.
